Junior Breeding Sheep

Steve Myers comes to us from Rushsylvania, Ohio, where he raises Polled Dorsets. He and his wife, Pat, run a flock of 50 ewes and have been breeding Dorsets for over 50 years. One of their stud rams was named Supreme Champion in the Jr. Show at Louisville last year. Steve has had the opportunity to judge from the east to west coast and looks forward to evaluating the sheep at the Keystone International this year.

Junior Breeding Sheep

Growing up, my parents fitted and showed sheep for a living, so I've been highly involved in the industry my entire life. I started showing my own Border Cheviots when I was 9, and eventually added Natural Coloreds when I was 16. Since then, I've continued to raise Cheviots and Natural Coloreds, and helped my parents with the family Montadale flock as well. I received my bachelor's degree from Purdue University in Agricultural Communication with a minor in Animal Science, and was a member of the 2009 Purdue Livestock Judging Team. Following Purdue, I received my master's degree from Oklahoma State University, also in Agricultural Communication. I began working for Novel Designs in 2009 part time, and started full time in 2012 as a web designer, where I still work. In addition, I'm also the editor of the Southdown Journal and Communications Coordinator for the American Southdown Breeders' Association, and the editor of Speaking of Columbias, the publication of the Columbia Sheep Breeders' Association. I've also increased my photography in the past several years, and enjoy taking on-farm photos and at shows, including being the photographer during Big E. When I'm not in front of a computer, behind a camera, or at a sheep show, I enjoy skiing, going to concerts, and CrossFit!
